Culture and Tourism: Issues and Challenges

Dr. Amrik Singh Thakur

Abstract

Interest in culture and tourism has exploded over the past several decades into a worldwide industry, creating both opportunities and concerns. Historical sites can be particularly problematic as tourism destinations because of their physical fragility and potential for interpretive bias. Yet heritage tourism also provides an incredible opportunity for archaeologists to reach out to the public, educating them and nurturing their interests not only in the history and prehistory of individual sites, but also about the methods, ethics, and current issues of archaeology.

India is experiencing an incredible Growth of tourism development and heritage tourism is one of the tourism branches that have long contributed to appeal the over seas special Interest tourist destination and acts as main pull factor as well as important marketing tool to attract more upmarket special interest tourist especially with special interests in heritage and arts, Culture. Heritage tourism has become as a potential form of alternative tourism among both international tourists as well as NRI and domestic travelers. The difference of ethnics present in India brought different local knowledge discipline ranging from its architecture, handicrafts, traditional attire, music and dance, which reflects a colorful heritage and an amalgamated rich and multi culture. There are arise of conflict in management of cultural heritage tourism in India face by tourism managers, stakeholders, governments, cultural heritage managers and local community itself. In order to maintain, conserve and preserve the resources and assets of cultural heritage in India, a system or management need to be develop that take into consideration on every issues and challenge, so that the decision making process is reliable to optimize the value of cultural heritage tourism industry in India. The purpose of this paper is to give an overview and discuss the status, issues and challenge of heritage and tourism in India.

Introduction

The potential economic benefits that tourism can bring do not materialize without careful planning. Indeed, uncontrolled tourism development can have major negative impacts on these jewels of humanity's heritage. World Heritage site managers are often inadequately prepared to deal with the challenges of visitation and to negotiate with the complex tourism industry. Their background most often lies in forestry, public environmental management and biological sciences. Thus, concepts such as business management, marketing, and entrepreneurial risk management are still relatively new to many site managers. manager can design and develop visitation according to the needs and limits of a site's master plans^[1].

Tourism is an important management issue at both natural and cultural World Heritage sites. It is an industry with well-known costs but also with the potential for aiding protection efforts. We recognize this potential and are convinced that by engaging, and by taking appropriate actions at the different levels of the sustainable tourism process, tourism can be managed to generate net site benefits^[2].

The complex relationships between tourism and culture heritage are revealed in the tensions between tradition and modernity. The role of heritage in postmodern tourism is examined, particularly built heritage, which is at the heart of cultural tourism. Four challenging issues in linking heritage and tourism are discussed: interpretation, marketing built heritage, planning for heritage, and the interdependencies between heritage tourism and the local community. Differences in approaches to the four issues indicate that heritage tourism raises more than planning and management issues for developing countries; they are fundamentally the problems of development^[3]. Cultural heritage tourism is defined as travelling to experience the places and activities that authentically represent the stories and people of the past and present^[4].

Tourism has bloomed as a major economic element of the world market and has become one of the largest industries in the world, since World War II [5]. There are different categories and varieties of tourism occurs recognized by EU-Committee of the Regions (2006), such as coastal tourism, urban tourism, island tourism, rural tourism and mountain tourism [6].

Within the tourism sector, coastal tourism is by far the most significant in terms of tourist flows and generation of income, but nowadays the new trends tourism emerged known as cultural heritage tourism. This trend is evident in the rise in the volume of tourists who seek adventure, culture, history, archaeology and interaction with local people [7].

Cultural tourism has long existed, but recent demographic, social, and cultural changes in the main source countries have led to an increasing number of new niche markets in destination countries, including culture-oriented holidays. Cultural heritage tourism is important for various reasons; it has a positive economic and social impact, it establishes and reinforces identity, it helps preserve the cultural heritage, with culture as an instrument, it facilitates harmony and understanding among people, it supports culture and helps renew tourism [8].

Culture and cultural heritage are crucial to people's identity, self-respect, and dignity, which apply to both affluent and poor societies. The World Tourism Organization (WTO) predicts that cultural tourism will be one of the five key tourism market segments in the future, and notes that growth in this area will present an increasing challenge in terms of managing visitor flows to cultural sites [9].

Culture Tourism in India

The Culture matters to individuals, ethnic groups, nations, and the international community. The values of heritage are various: symbolic, historic, informational, aesthetic and economic. There are two forms of heritage & culture present in India, known as tangible and intangible. Tangible cultural heritage can be found in the form of buildings or artifacts, while intangible cultural heritage was in terms of people's values, attitudes and way of life, that may have existed or exist in relation to the heritage of India or any part of India or in relation to the heritage of a India community.

In other words, cultural heritage can be seen in many forms including buildings, areas, dance, food, dress, events, values, lifestyles and handicrafts. Given the values of cultural property, many problems created when such materials was damaged, destroyed, or removed from its context. These losses include the damage or loss of buildings of historical importance, archaeological sites, monuments, and objects; the loss of traditional knowledge and "scientific" information; the loss of access to objects of cultural or national importance; and the alienation of people from their culture or the loss of national pride.

Interpretation of cultural heritage is an integral aspect of both visitor experience and conservation of heritage. Interpretation needs to widen its debate to incorporate more experiential components as noted above. There is also a specific need to research interpretation in relation to cultural heritage tourism specifically, as distinct from broader interpretation or heritage interpretation research. Gaps in current interpretation research for cultural heritage tourism as defined for this project include:-

- the role of interpretation as both a tool of education and visitor experience, and as a means of achieving cultural heritage conservation
- training and education for interpretation development, delivery and assessment
- closing the gap between manager knowledge and public experiences
- developing products to assist in the development of appropriate interpretation
- measuring success of interpretation of cultural heritage
- interpretation and promotion of novel or niche aspects of cultural heritage, for example Agricultural and industrial heritage
- broadening tourist experiences through multiple modes of interpretation
- Contestation and authenticity in heritage tourism.

Heritage tourism is traveling to experience the places and activities that authentically represent the stories and people of the past and present, which include historic, cultural and natural attractions. Cultural Heritage is an appearance of the ways of living developed by a community and passed on from generation to generation, including customs, practices, places, objects and artistic expressions. Other than that, cultural heritage also expressed as either intangible or tangible cultural heritage. Cultural Heritage can be distinguished into three types; built environment (buildings, townscapes, archaeological remains); natural environment (rural landscapes, coasts and shorelines, agricultural heritage); and artifacts (books & documents, objects, pictures).

Cultural heritage tourism has a number of objectives that must be met within the context of sustainable development such as; the conservation of cultural resources, accurate interpretation of resources, authentic visitors experience, and the stimulation of the earned revenues of cultural resources.

Therefore, cultural heritage tourism is not only concerned with identification, management and protection of the heritage values but it must also be involved in understanding the impact of tourism on communities and regions, achieving economic and social benefits, providing financial resources for protection, as well as marketing and promotion. [10, 11].

Table 1: Cultural Heritage Values [12]

No.	Values	Details
1	Symbolic	Cultural property provides awareness of and pride in cultural identity. In the postcolonial world, the idea of a national cultural heritage is of particular importance to emerging nations, and the protection of cultural property is a highly political issue.
2	Historic	The cultural heritage represents eras and sometimes civilizations that have passed. Much of this heritage symbolizes a florescence of a region's traditions and cultures. Heritage is often of particular importance to non-literate societies and to segments of literate societies often ignored in conventional "historical" documents. In countries such as Australia, we see the implications of cultural heritage in connecting Aboriginal communities with their past and with the Continuation of traditional lifestyle.

3	Informational	The cultural heritage is essential to both public education and scholarly research. Archaeologists, historians, and ethnographers use material culture to study ancient and traditional cultures. Information about how other cultures met challenges to their existence can help us as we meet the demands of our own world. The study of other cultures can also lead to new intellectual achievements. For scholars, the greatest informational value comes in studying cultural property within its original context.
4	Aesthetic	The cultural heritage can provide an aesthetic, emotional experience for the viewer, leading to personal growth and development. Moreover, these buildings, artworks, and artifacts can serve as a creative inspiration for contemporary artists, both those working within traditional forms and those working in a modern style.
5	Economic	Cultural property – comprising archaeological sites, monuments, historic buildings and quarters, and archaeological and ethnographic materials in museums-is an important focus of tourism in many nations. As such, this Tourism, which can be local, national, or international, generates employment and revenue.

India has a long tradition of tourism, attracting travelers fascinated by the art, architecture, handicrafts, traditional attire, music and dance, which reflects a colorful heritage and an amalgamated culture. India consists of Many ethnic and other indigenous groups, as well as other immigrant Asian ethnicities.

Although each of these cultures has retained their religions, customs and way of life, they have also blended together to create India diverse heritage. India heritage is a unique expression of our history and our national identity. It enriches India lives, and provides a meaningful foundation on which to base the future national development. Yet in many places, precious cultural heritage is under threat from new developments, mostly due to lack of awareness of its historical and architectural significance. Coupled with the growth in tourism, cultural heritage tourism has emerged as a potential alternative tourism among both international tourists and India domestic travelers. heritage tourism in India attracted great publicities with the increase in the number of incoming tourists annually, due to its marvelous cultural heritage resources that are readily available to be explored such as the existence of multi-cultural, historical buildings, colorful lifestyles and friendly atmosphere.

1	Issues and Challenge	Tourism is a powerful economic development tool, which creates jobs, provides new business opportunities and strengthens local economies. It helps to protect our nation’s natural and cultural treasures and improve the quality of life for residents and visitors alike if cultural heritage tourism development using a proper planning. In the former year, the primary role of tourism industry was acting as marketing ready products to tourists. Nowadays, tourism, preservation, heritage and culture are much more likely to overlap, where some state tourism offices now help develop heritage resources, and a number of preservation organizations are marketing their sites to tourist.

The promotion of cultural heritage tourism in India faces numerous underlying issues that both related to the complexity of the society living in India.

The tourism industry is driven mainly by private agencies with the prime motivation of generating profit. There are several issues that need to be reviewed to develop a successful cultural heritage tourism industry especially in understanding different perspectives between tourism operators, cultural heritage managers and the communities themselves. Tourism operators run a tourism business and serve customers but have constraints in accessing the sites they want to visit and their products. Tourism operators depend on a market that can have strong seasonal variation such as holiday periods and yearly events. Tourism operators need a great deal of certainty in access, timing and facilities to deliver reliable and efficient service to domestic and international clients.

Heritage managers have a primary duty to protect and conserve the site under their control. The cultural heritage such as arts performance, dance and events, may be not affected directly from development of tourism industry and increasing of tourist arrivals, but cultural heritage sites may be affected. Because of the fragility of the site, public access to heritage sites is not always appropriate or may have to be restricted. Other than that, heritage managers have obligations and strong ethics of providing education and recreation for the public about the site in their care. Other than tourism operators and heritage managers, there is also the local community where the heritage site is located where they may be keen to develop tourism but they may also be protective of their privacy and wary of the effects that tourism might have.

Therefore, it is important to establish early needs, interests and aspirations of the local community. Local communities should be consulted with the tourism planning, development and operation of the heritage site. With the involvement of local communities, it will help ensure that the tourism activity is sensitive to community purposes and ambitions. It will also be able to capture the essence of the site and its people.

Table 2 Issues Arise in Cultural Heritage Tourism Industry Faced by Tourism Operators, Heritage Managers and Local Communities. One of the issues and challenges in managing cultural heritage assets in Malaysia are in terms of funding. Managing cultural heritage assets such as heritage buildings, is considered as expensive and costly to some people, which is normally funded by government or private institutions.

Below shows the list of issues that arise in the cultural heritage tourism industry faced by tourism operators, heritage managers and local communities.

Peoples	Issues
Tourism operators or enterprise	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> *Need to make a profit *Need for a competitive advantage over other products *Size of investment required and difficulties in raising finance *Cost of establishing and managing operations *Long lead time to receive approvals *Long lead time to foster and develop a target market especially an international market and reach profitability *Cost of providing service infrastructure in remote locations *Cost of continuing to develop and service markets.
Heritage managers	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> *Tension between the need to protect the site and the pressure to provide for public access *Pressure for scant resources for conservation to be diverted to managing tourism *Assessment of the impacts tourism might have on the site and fear for the impacts that may be difficult to predict. *Sensitivity regarding the information about the location, direction of heritage site which public Access may be undesirable *The effect of increasing visitor to the surrounding areas, wildlife and vegetation *The physical capacity of the site to handle visitor *Cumulative effects of tourism growth over time *The need to provide visitor facilities *Fears of loss of control of interpretation and inaccuracy and manipulation of messages *Effect and influence of volunteers and sponsors on the management of the site *The cultural and intellectual property implications of tourism such as respect for sensitive information, copyright and use of images in marketing and promotion.
Local Communities	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> *Whether the visitor attraction is presenting a local community perspective. *Whether community leaders have been identified and actively consulted. *Whether religious or cultural sensitivities associated with the use or presentation of heritage site have been adequately taken into account. *How local people can take an active role in negotiating the presentation, management and operation of the attraction *How tourism industry give benefits for local people in maximized *How negative impacts of tourism development can be reduced.

Other issues and challenge is which typically associated with management of cultural heritage.

In India, problem such as lack of conservation officers, economic recession, lack of collaboration, lack of awareness on the importance of cultural heritage asset, and others. Involvement of stakeholders, particularly the locals is very important ^[14].

On management and stakeholder's aspect, a few issues had been identified such as directions, objectives and approach adopted by stakeholders for the management of the cultural heritage area. Some of the areas have more than one stakeholders and it might cause conflict among them, since each stakeholder work within its own scope, roles, funding and policy. Pilgrims site, known as popular heritage sites, has valuable assets that need to be managed carefully, but there are still weaknesses to be seen, indicating that the experts have not performed their task to the optimum, poor maintenance and lack of control of the expert appointed.

Currently, the cultural heritage tourism in India is managed by different stakeholders in each cultural heritage area. In order to maintain, conserve and preserve the resources and assets of cultural heritage, decision making process must be reliable to optimize the value of heritage assets and to ensure its consistence with the principles and guidelines stated.

Based on observation, there is also lack of collaborations to date in terms of managing the assets between the local authority and other stakeholders, since they are working independently without having a shared interest as a basis for their tasks.

It was also proven challenging to find sufficient financial support and fund in managing Cultural heritage assets which is very important so that the management process will not unfairly burdening the stakeholders especially the community in the future.

Conclusion

Preserving the world's cultural heritage for the enrichment and education of present and future generations is crucial. A great deal of tourism relies on places with natural, indigenous and historic significance which tourism products are based. In order to respect the cultural significance of the destination, people involve in tourism industry need to be sensitive to cultural groups who have a special interest in them and they need to directly involve in the planning and promotion of the destination. Cultural Heritage resources will play a significant role in sustainable cultural, social, economic development of communities, so the physical fabric, that has influenced their creation, has also to be maintained.

Therefore, the careful planning of cultural-heritage tourism leads to sustainable regional development. It is crucial to find a proper way to settle the issues and challenges arise during managing and promotion of cultural heritage tourism, and once is taken into action it will lead to the heritage tourism development model that will lead to the bright prospects of the overall tourism business in the region.

Major responsibilities of interpretive programs include developing long-term public support for protection of resources by engendering appreciation and understanding value of the resources, providing the exchange of information necessary for the successful adaptation of visitors to the resource environment, and developing support for policies and programs that incorporate protection/preservation of resources as a fundamental part of their management and use as Tourism attractions or product for visitors.

We have an opportunity to make a significant contribution in educating and influencing the Tourist populations and tourism industry, but how best do we achieve this? We need to educate ourselves, and the tourism community, on the critical issues related to Culture and heritage tourism. We also need to determine how to work as compatible partners with the tourism industry.
